BACKGROUND

Over the last decade, the development policy debate has been dominated by the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). This set of development policy objectives has proved to be a very effective tool for public awareness-raising and campaigning on development issues. At the same time, however, the last ten years have also highlighted the weaknesses of a development policy approach which is focused primarily on combating the most extreme forms of income poverty and hunger and meeting communities' basic needs. In view of the changes taking place in global economic and (power-)political relations – China's upsurge in significance being an obvious example – the division of the world into "industrialised" and "developing" countries, with an affluent North and impoverished global South, seems increasingly anachronistic. In our ever more interdependent world, countries which were long characterised as "developing" or "emerging" nations are now helping to shape the international policy agenda and bringing their own ideas and concepts to the table. The global power shift, the emergence of new strategic alliances and the growing importance of global public goods are just some of the crucial factors influencing the international community's efforts to negotiate a new development agenda. Some of the emerging countries are themselves now playing a greater role as development actors in other countries and regions of the world – a major paradigm shift in the global development architecture. These changes bring new challenges and offer new opportunities. Above all, they force us to question the usefulness of development goals which, although formulated at the global level, are mainly relevant to a narrowly defined group of "poor" countries.

In recent years, processes which seek to identify alternative concepts of development and models of prosperity have been initiated at various levels. At the United Nations Conference on Sustainable Development (Rio+20) the international community agreed to develop a set of sustainable development goals (SDGs). However, they will be elaborated in a different organisational setting to the post 2015 Millennium Development Goals planning process. Aspirations to combine both agendas in the near future were disappointed.

Against this background, the Development and Peace Foundation (SEF), together with the Global Policy Forum and the United Nations Association of Germany, will give a discussion floor to those still demanding and working for a common agenda. The Symposium will explore the fundamental issue of what development will mean in an increasingly complex and differentiated world in future. Which new strategies and forms of cooperation must be developed at the global policy level in response to an increasingly diverse cast of actors and growing global interdependencies? This year's Symposium will provide a platform here in Germany for the debate – now being conducted with growing intensity by international civil society and policy-makers – about the future of the MDGs and their institutional parameters, and, in particular, will explore the implications for UN institutions and other Bonn-based organisations.

The Bonn Symposium is a platform for the exchange of international knowledge and experience on the implementation of the sustainable development principle. As a core event for Bonn as an International City, the Bonn Symposium aims to raise the City's external profile as a centre of excellence for sustainable development issues.

PART IIBASES, SCOPE AND LIMITATIONS.*THE NORMATIVE FRAMEWORK FOR A NEW DEVELOPMENT AGENDA*Key questions

What is the normative framework for a future global development agenda? Which themes/sectors should this agenda cover? Should the future development agenda apply only to the “developing countries”, or should it adopt a universal approach? What are the consequences caused by a different organisational set up for future SDGs and MDGs?

PART III
WORKSHOPS
BUILDING BLOCKS FOR A NEW DEVELOPMENT AGENDA

Key question

Which thematic areas should feed into a new development agenda? Different actors set different priorities, some of which will be presented and discussed as examples during the workshop sessions.

15.30 hrs Parallel workshop sessions

WS A A practical response to the globalised high-protein feed production – German

Organiser: Stiftung Umwelt und Entwicklung

In the global animal feed production, there are two models opposing each other: the dominating type of a global division of labor and the local production type. In the global scheme, the Europeans usually produce and export grain, while soy is being produced in South and North America. How and why has this economy been established like that? Which problems result from such a division of labor and which benefits could derive from a regional production? These questions will be debated on the topic of high-protein animal feed production.

WS B In search of a new development narrative – English

Organiser: European Association of Development Research and Training Institutes

There have been numerous calls for a new development narrative/paradigm in the past. The EADI/DSA Conference in September 2011 aimed to generate ideas on new narratives and universals for this changing world and asked some hard questions: Whether ‘development’ should be more about ‘global development’ or ‘one-world’ and how is this consistent with a focus on the poorest and ‘the bottom billion’? How can we work with uncertainty as the norm rather than stability? How can we better address vulnerability and resilience, two critical dimensions of sustainability, in conceptual analysis and strategic implementation when discussing development? Building on these questions and the outcomes of this conference, a working paper (to be published in October 2012) will be presented and discussed.

WS C Sustainability, green economy, green growth... what next? – German

Organiser: Deutsche UNESCO-Kommision

The main aim of the concept of “green economy” is to build a “bridge” towards the concept of sustainable development. Sustainable development has been declared as global objective in theory, but there are few serious implementation efforts. Rio +20 almost ended up in tearing down even this bridge. What does the current discourse shift mean, in particular for the cultural and social dimensions of sustainable development and education for sustainable development?

PART IV

POWER, INTERESTS AND ALLIANCES.

AGENDA-SETTING UNDER NEW GEOPOLITICAL CONDITIONS

Key questions

Which (power-political) interests are the various actors pursuing in the development of a new agenda? Which role do conventional alliances of states within the UN play, particularly the G77 as the largest organization of the global South? Do new state alliances beyond the traditional categories of North/South respectively Industrial-/Developing countries emerge? Which measures can be taken to include the interests of small states, indigenous peoples and civil society organisations in the discussions of a new development agenda appropriately?

PART VWORKSHOPS*WHO WILL DETERMINE THE NEW DEVELOPMENT AGENDA?*Key question

Shaping and implementing a new agenda for development is not just a matter for the world's countries and governments. Which role can, and should, be played by other institutions/actors?

11.30 hrs Parallel workshop sessions

WS AShaping global development cooperation:*– English*The role of the EU in the United Nations

Organiser: Deutsches Institut für Entwicklungspolitik (DIE)

The United Nations are a key forum for shaping international cooperation. What is the role of the EU Commissions and member states in this regard? What are the opportunities and challenges in coordinating positions within the UN? In particular, what role will the EU Commissions and member states play in shaping the post-2015 development agenda? These questions will be discussed in the course of this workshop on the role of the EU in the United Nations.

WS BOverrated or Underestimated? The Influence of Private Foundations*– English*on the Global Development Agenda

Organiser: Institut für Entwicklung und Frieden (INEF)

Private donors do not only contribute financial resources, but are expected to be more "effective" in development cooperation. For critics, however, it seems quite problematic that public goods are increasingly delivered by private actors. How do private foundations, as one type of private actor, shape the global development agenda? What kind of problems and challenges do they have to cope with? How do they try to achieve their goals, and what impacts do they have?

WS CMDG's and the role of the media:*– English*Ranging from traditional to new interactive forms

Organiser: Deutsche Welle

Do you use the media to implement your development agenda? The discussion in this workshop is supposed to show which role traditional as well as new social media can play within development cooperation. Be it E-Learning networks, blogs, facebook sites or SMS responses – already there exists a wide range of possibilities to involve your partner on the spot into the process of development and evaluation.

13.30 hrs Lunch break

PART VIOUTLOOK.*STRATEGIES FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF A FUTURE DEVELOPMENT AGENDA*Key questions

What steps are required to bring together the global sustainability and MDG-agenda? What can be expected and demanded by the new „High-level Panel of Eminent Persons“ for the future development agenda? What by the SDG working group? What should the division of work in formulating a new development agenda between states, UN, civil society and science look like? Which are the future fora to formulate and safeguard global development goals?
